John Lutz has been writing for years and years, and one of his greatest attributes, to me, is his command of the language. His grammar and syntax are perfect. I very much enjoyed his low-key Fred Carver, PI series, and initially, I thought the Frank Quinn novels were among the most suspenseful out there.

The last Quinn saw of him, he was sitting on the ground, talking on what Quinn assumed was a cell phone, and waving his free arm at Quinn, urging him to continue the chase. Chalmers had come late to the hunt, joining Quinn after Quinn had followed a trail of dead bodies from New York City to Maine. There was a lot of blood around the sheriff.
