The biggest interest story going into the race was the impending retirement of popular veteran Michael Andretti. Andretti announced that the 2003 Indy 500 would be his final race, and that he would retire from driving immediately after, to focus on team ownership. (Note that Andretti came out of retirement and returned to drive at Indy in 2006-2007.) ...

Finally the course's pièce de résistance: The Roof! After passing through the gauntlet, the runners climbed 120m (c130y) up the museum's grass-covered roof, which pitched up at a daunting 10% grade, before sprinting back down the same roof into The Berm—a sloped earthen embankment designed to allow the athletes to make a U-turn and either rejoin the loop or turn into the downhill finish.
