Take the out-of-bounds play for example. Some out-of-bounds situations are relatively easy and innocuous calls to make. But on the other hand, some out-of-bounds rulings can be among the toughest and perhaps the most significant rulings you make the entire game. Imagine there are 10 seconds left in a one-point game.

Just a little introductory run down on a The Summer Games: Out of Bounds. It has slightly darker tomes with an enemies to lovers story line and a forbidden love/attraction between the characters. The sexual tension is off the charts, the banter, bickering and baiting (because I like alliterations) were fantastically written and a joy to read.

Had the refs ruled Parks stepped out of bounds, it could have had huge ramifications on the game. The extra-point attempt would have failed, and the Saints would have kicked off to the Broncos with the game tied at 23-23. The Broncos would have had to get within field-goal range, and if they failed, the game would have gone to overtime.
