Fish Gregory Mone

Fish follows the adventures of a young pirate named Maurice Reidy. He's not your average rogue. For one, he hates to fight, and refuses to wield a weapon of any kind. He also loves to swim; that's how he earned his nickname. These might not seem like particularly good qualities for a pirate, or a...

Wait. Children's adventure novels and science journalism? Who does that? Me, I guess. I'm the author of the books Fish and Dangerous Waters, and the co-author, with Bill Nye, of Jack and the Geniuses, a series of science-themed mystery/adventure novels for kids. Plus a few others books, too. I'm also a journalist, and a longtime...

Fish, nicknamed for his incredible swimming abilities, is a twelve-year-old boy from a poor farming family. After taking a job as a courier for his uncle, Fish is waylaid by pirates, who steal the package he's carrying.

Fish by Gregory Mone | Scholastic

Tongue embedded in cheek, Mone proffers a nautical tale well stocked with typecast pirates and starring an Irish farmboy whose aversion to fighting is surpassed only by his abilities in the water. Inducted into the knavish crew of the sloop Scurvy Mistress, young Fish finds himself involved both in piecing together baroque clues to the location of a fabulous golden treasure known as the Chain ...
