There are four kings and four queens in this book. Which king or queen did you admire the most, and why? Which did you think was the least successful or sympathetic? Was any ruler, male or female, truly outstanding? 10. Which king benefited the most from having married one of these sisters? Which the least? 11.

Four Queens: The Provencal Sisters Who Ruled Europe

Sister Acts. The 13th century was a very long time ago. But you'd never know it from Nancy Goldstone's breezy account of the careers of four sisters — Marguerite, Eleanor, Sanchia and Beatrice — born to Raymond Berenger V, the Count of Provence, and his wife, Beatrice of Savoy. Some might call that a victory.

Sanchia's sisters Margaret, Eleanor and Beatrice were the respective wives of Louis IX of France, Henry III of England and Charles I of Sicily. Sanchia was said to have a softer and more winsome type of good looks than either her older sisters, Margaret and Eleanor.

Sanchia of Provence - Wikipedia

The 4 sisters of Provence who all became queens sounded fascinating. It's taken me 3 tries of reading this (and it's short) because it keeps losing my interest. It's not Marguerite, Eleanor, Sanchia or Beatrice; it's the horrible organization.
